Government Attorneys, Confidentiality, and Privilege:
An Update

Phillip M. Sparkes∗

The relationship of attorney to client is that of agent to principal.1 Every agent owes to the principal duties of loyalty,2 which includes the duty not to use or disclose confidential information.3 In the performance of those duties, an attorney is held to a standard higher than is the ordinary agent.4

For attorneys, the duty of confidentiality has at least three aspects: the ethical duty to preserve client confidences, the attorney-client privilege, and the work product doctrine.5 While each derives from the agency relationship, each aspect is distinct from the others and has its own characteristics, consequences, and elements.6 This paper considers some of the applications of the duty of confidentiality and the attorney-client

---

∗ Director and Assistant Professor of Law, Local Government Law Center, Salmon P. Chase College of Law, Northern Kentucky University. Professor Sparkes currently chairs the Ethics Section of the International Municipal Lawyers Association. This paper is an expansion of remarks made at the Kentucky Bar Association Local Government Law Seminar, Lexington, KY, April 26, 2007. An earlier version of this paper was given at the Ethics for Municipal Lawyers Seminar, 2006 Kentucky League of Cities Convention, Lexington, KY, October 6, 2006.

1 Ronald D. Rotunda and John S. Dzienkowski, Legal Ethics: The Lawyer’s Deskbook on Professional Responsibility (“LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK”) 211 (2006); Natural Resources & Environmental Protection Cabinet v. Pinnacle Coal Corporation, 729 S.W.2d 438, 439 (Ky. 1987) (“It is a fundamental principle of Kentucky law that an attorney is an agent for his client.”).

2 RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF THE LAW OF AGENCY §§ 387-98.

3 RESTATEMENT (SECOND) OF THE LAW OF AGENCY § 395.

4 See Clark v. Burden, 917 S.W.2d 574, 575 (Ky. 1996) citing Daugherty v. Runner, 581 S.W.2d 12, 16 (Ky. App. 1978) (“The relationship of attorney-client is generally that of principal and agent; however, the attorney is vested with powers superior to those of any ordinary agent because of the attorney's quasi-judicial status as an officer of the court; thus the attorney is responsible for the administration of justice in the public interest, a higher duty than any ordinary agent owes his principal. Since the relationship of attorney-client is one fiduciary in nature, the attorney has the duty to exercise in all his relationships with this client-principal the most scrupulous honor, good faith and fidelity to his client's interest.”).

privilege for lawyers in the government setting, paying particular attention to practices in Kentucky and the Sixth Circuit.7

---

I. The Duty of Confidentiality

The ethical duty to preserve client confidences finds expression in Model Rule of Professional Conduct 1.6(a): A lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, or the disclosure is permitted by paragraph (b). The Kentucky analog, Supreme Court Rule 3.130(1.6)(a), reflects an earlier version of the Model Rules: A lawyer shall not reveal information relating to representation of a client unless the client consents after consultation, except for disclosures that are impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation, and except as stated in paragraph (b).

The attorney’s duty of confidentiality and the attorney-client privilege are so closely related that the terms “privileged” and “confidential” are often used interchangeably. Comment 3 to Model Rule 1.6 distinguishes the ethical obligation from the attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine:

The attorney-client privilege and work product doctrine apply in judicial and other proceedings in which a lawyer may be called as a witness or otherwise required to produce evidence concerning a client. The rule of client-lawyer confidentiality applies in situations other than those where evidence is sought from the lawyer through compulsion of law. The confidentiality rule, for example, applies not only to matters communicated in confidence by the client but also to all information relating to the representation, whatever its source. A lawyer may not disclose such information except as authorized or required by the Rules of Professional conduct or other law.

---

8 American Bar Association, MODEL RULES OF PROFESSIONAL CONDUCT, Rule 1.6(a) (2006) (“MRPC”).

11 MRPC Rule 1.6, Comment 3. Compare Ky. Sup. Ct. Rule 3.130(1.6), Comment 5. See also RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 59. The Model Rules and the Restatement are largely consistent in their discussion of the protected information.
As this shows, the ethical duty is broader than the either the attorney-privilege or the work product doctrine. Attorneys have an ethical obligation to maintain client confidences, even if they are not privileged. The purpose of the broader ethical rule is to encourage the client to speak freely with the lawyer and to encourage the lawyer to obtain information beyond that offered by the client.

The obligations imposed by Model Rule 1.6 apply to attorneys for the government as well as to attorneys in private practice. However, the lawyer with a government client is, or soon becomes, keenly aware that his or her situation differs markedly from the lawyer with a private client, even where the private client is an organization. The Model Rules themselves recognize this.

The duty defined in this Rule [1.13] applies to governmental organizations. Defining precisely the identity of the client and prescribing the resulting obligations of such lawyers may be more difficult in the government context and is a matter beyond the scope of these Rules. Although in some circumstances the client may be a specific agency, it may also be a branch of government, such as the executive branch, or the government as a whole. For example, if the action or failure to act involves the head of a bureau, either the department of which the bureau is a part or the relevant branch of government may be the client for purposes of this Rule. Moreover, in a matter involving the conduct of government officials, a government lawyer may have authority under applicable law to question such conduct more extensively than that of a lawyer for a private organization in similar circumstances. Thus, when the client is a governmental organization, a different balance may be appropriate between maintaining confidentiality and assuring that the wrongful act is prevented or rectified, for public business is involved. In addition, duties of lawyers employed by the government or lawyers in military service may be defined by statutes and regulation. This Rule does not limit that authority.

---

12 LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK 212 (2006). Virtually all information relating to the representation is initially within Rule 1.6. Rule 1.6 protects all information relating to the representation unless the disclosures are impliedly authorized, or falls within certain named exceptions, or the client waives his rights.

13 Epstein, supra note 7, at 15.

14 LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK at 214.

15 LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK at 223.

16 See MRPC 1.13 (Organization as Client).

This need for a different balance leads Prof. James Moliterno to observe that the government lawyer’s duty of confidentiality “is much more modest in scope and perhaps even different in kind.” As Professor Moliterno’s observation suggests, the law of legal ethics as constituted for the private lawyer is not necessarily a reliable and effective guide for the public lawyer. Professor Patterson explains why: “The ultimate source of the rules of legal ethics is the lawyer-client relationship. The paradigm of that relationship is one lawyer, one client and the lawyer’s first duty is to serve and protect the interests of that client…. The structure of the lawyer’s relationship to the government client is not so simple.” This less than perfect fit between the Model Rules and the situation of the government lawyers is exacerbated by the fact that the Model Rules as a whole tend to emphasize the role of lawyer as advocate and downplay the role of lawyer as counselor.
Rule 1.6 is no exception. Nevertheless, the common assumption is that the government lawyer represents his or her client in much the same way a private lawyer represents the individual client and that the rules of ethics apply in much the same way as well.

Government lawyers striving to fulfill their ethical responsibility of confidentiality face two distinct kinds of problems. One pertains to the question of to whom they owe the duty; the other pertains to the nature of the work performed.

Lawyers in government often perform functions outside the traditional role of the lawyer. They may hold office, advise on matters of policy, and advise on matters of politics. Indeed, even the lawyer employed in the traditional lawyer’s role seldom has the luxury to give only legal advice. The threshold question therefore becomes whether the rules governing lawyer conduct apply to the conduct of lawyers when performing these non-traditional roles. The Preamble to the Model Rules answers the question in the affirmative. The next question concerns the applicability of the rules to non-adversarial functions. As noted above, the rules tend to downplay this aspect of legal practice.

---

18 James E. Moliterno, The Federal Government Lawyer’s Duty to Breach Confidentiality, 14 TEMPLE POL.
AND CIVIL RIGHTS L. REV. 633, 633 (2005) (Policies such as open records and open meetings laws militate in favor or a weaker duty of confidentiality and a weaker attorney-client privilege.).

20 Id. at Pt.III-3 (1982).

21 Note, Rethinking the Professional Responsibilities of Federal Agency Lawyers, 115 HARV. L. REV. 1184

22 “[T]here are rules that apply to lawyers who are not active in the practice of law or to practicing lawyers even when they are acting in a nonprofessional capacity.” MRPC pmbl. ¶3. Model Rule 8.4, for example, states it is professional misconduct to state or imply an ability to influence improperly a government agency or official. The rationale is that abuses in the nonprofessional context can suggest an inability to fulfill the professional role of lawyers. See Kristina Hammond, Note, Plugging the Leaks: Applying the Nevertheless, it is generally accepted that the rules apply to lawyers acting in non-adversarial roles.23

Clients may always waive their confidentiality rights.24 Ascertaining who is the client of the government lawyer is a perennial problem. Anyone who asserts with confidence a single right answer probably has not himself or herself worked in government. Many writers have offered suggestions as to the identity of the government lawyer’s client. Prof. Crampton lists as possibilities “(1) the public (2) the government as a whole (3) the branch of government in which the lawyer is employed (4) the particular agency or department in which the lawyer works and (5) the responsible officers who make decisions for the agency.”25 Treating the officers as client probably makes for the easiest application of Rule 1.6 and for determining who can waive the right to confidentiality. Working backward through the list makes it increasingly difficult to figure out who has the power to consent to disclosures of confidential information. By the time one gets through the list to the public as client, the question becomes whether there is really much that can be truly confidential and whether there is anything to waive.26

II. The Attorney-Client Privilege

The duty of confidentiality is an ethical rule; the attorney-client privilege is a rule of evidence. In common with the ethical obligation to maintain confidentiality, the attorney-client privilege reflects a deep and long-standing societal commitment to promoting free communication between lawyers and their clients.27 However, because the attorney-client privilege exists in tension with the adversarial system’s search for truth, 23 See Fred C. Zacharias, Rethinking Confidentiality, 74 IOWA L. REV. 351, 393 cited in David Lew, Note, Revised Model Rule 1.6: What Effect Will the New Rule Have on Practicing Attorneys?, 18 GEO. J. LEGAL ETHICS 881, 887 (reporting that a real estate lawyer did not think that confidentiality rules applied to his practice because it did not involve litigation).

24 LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK at 251.

26 Hammond, supra note 22, at 790-91.

27 See generally Epstein, supra note 7. Epstein warns, however, “As the fundamental trust that a society reposes in lawyers erodes, so too will the protection afforded by the attorney-client privilege.” Id. at 2. The privilege is the oldest of the privileges, dating to the sixteenth century. Originally, the privilege was the attorney’s, and its purpose was to protect his honor as a gentleman. The modern privilege is the client’s, and its purpose is to promote freedom of consultation. See Upjohn Co. v. United States, 449 U.S. 383 (1991).
much that is covered by the ethical duty of confidentiality will not necessarily fall within the evidentiary privilege.\textsuperscript{28} Courts construe the privilege strictly.\textsuperscript{29}

There is no tradition of a government attorney-client privilege.\textsuperscript{30} Nevertheless, courts and practitioners commonly assumed that the attorney-client privilege should apply to government clients.\textsuperscript{31} They further assumed that government could assert the attorney-client privilege in much the same way that corporations and other organizational clients could.\textsuperscript{32}

The impetus to recognize a government privilege traces to the advent of the Freedom of Information Act. Additional impetus was provided by the Proposed Federal Rules of Evidence and, more recently, by the Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers.\textsuperscript{33} Some courts and commentators have cautioned against broadly applying the privilege to governmental entities.\textsuperscript{34} Others, however, argue for a strong governmental attorney-client privilege.\textsuperscript{35}

\begin{flushright}
\begin{footnotesize}
\textsuperscript{28} Epstein, \textit{supra} note 7, at 12.
\textsuperscript{29} Id.
\textsuperscript{30} Bryan S. Gowdy, Note, \textit{Should the Federal Government Have an Attorney-Client Privilege?}, 51 FLA. L.
REV. 695, 706 (1999). Prior to 1963 only two courts had held that communications between government employees and government attorneys could be protected by the attorney-client privilege. Melanie B. Leslie, \textsuperscript{31} Leslie, \textit{supra} note 30, at 476 citing Charles Alan Wright and Kenneth W. Graham, Jr., \textit{FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE} \S{} 5474.
\textsuperscript{32} See Model Rule 1.13 and Epstein, \textit{supra} note 7, at 126-131. See generally, Jeffrey L. Goodman and Jason Zabokrtsky, \textit{The Attorney-Client Privilege and the Municipal Lawyer}, 48 DRAKE L. REV. 655 (2000); Walter Pincus, \textit{No Clear Legal Answer: The Uncertain State of the Government Attorney-Client Privilege}, 4 Green Bag 2d 269 (2001);
Patricia E. Salkin, \textit{Beware: What You Say to Your \{Government\} Lawyer May Be Held Against You – The Erosion of Government Officials as Attorneys and Clients: Why Privilege thePrivileged?}, 77 IND. L.J. 469, 481-94 (2002) (arguing that the analogy of government to corporation does not hold). Professor Leslie accepts the need for a limited privilege to allow the government to protect its interests in litigation or administrative proceedings.
\textsuperscript{33} Leslie, \textit{supra} note 30, at 474.
\textsuperscript{34} Epstein \textit{supra} note 7 at 129; Leslie, \textit{supra} note 30; Paul R. Rice, \textit{ATTORNEY-CLINENT PRIVILEGE IN THE UNITED STATES} 129 (2d ed. 1999) (T[he]ere would be great confusion in the application of the attorney-client privilege to government agencies if the protection turned on perceived parallels between the legal needs of government agencies and private clients.); In re Witness Before Special Grand Jury 2000-2, 288 F.3d 289 (7th Cir. 2002);
In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum, 112 F.3d 910 (8th Cir. 1997); In re Lindsey, 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998).
\textsuperscript{35} See Patricia E. Salkin and Allyson Phillips, \textit{Eliminating Political Maneuvering: A Light in the Tunnel for the Government Attorney-Client Privilege}, 39 IND. L. REV. 561 (2006) and the sources collected at Leslie, \textit{supra} note 30, at 470-72, notes 7 and 8.
\end{footnotesize}
\end{flushright}
Kentucky Rule of Evidence 503 establishes the availability of the privilege in Kentucky.\textsuperscript{36} Kentucky’s rule creates a broad governmental attorney client privilege modeled on Proposed Federal rule of Evidence 503.\textsuperscript{37}

\textsuperscript{36} Ky. R. Evid. 503 Lawyer-Client Privilege.
(a) Definitions. As used in this rule:
(1) "Client" means a person, including \textit{a public officer}, corporation, association, or \textit{other organization or entity, either public or private}, who is rendered professional legal services by a lawyer, or who consults a lawyer with a view to obtaining professional legal services from the lawyer.
(2) "Representative of the client" means:
(A) A person having authority to obtain professional legal services, or to act on advice thereby rendered on behalf of the client; or
(B) Any employee or representative of the client who makes or receives a confidential communication:
(i) In the course and scope of his or her employment;
(ii) Concerning the subject matter of his or her employment; and
(iii) To effectuate legal representation for the client.
(3) "Lawyer" means a person authorized, or reasonably believed by the client to be authorized to engage in the practice of law in any state or nation.
(4) "Representative of the lawyer" means a person employed by the lawyer to assist the lawyer in rendering professional legal services.
(5) A communication is "confidential" if not intended to be disclosed to third persons other than those to whom disclosure is made in furtherance of the rendition of professional legal services to the client or those reasonably necessary for the transmission of the communication.
(b) General rule of privilege. A client has a privilege to refuse to disclose and to prevent any other person from disclosing a confidential communication made for the purpose of facilitating the rendition of professional legal services to the client:
(1) Between the client or a representative of the client and the client's lawyer or a representative of the lawyer;
(2) Between the lawyer and a representative of the lawyer;
(3) By the client or a representative of the client or the client's lawyer or a representative of the lawyer representing another party in a pending action and concerning a matter of common interest therein;
(4) Between representatives of the client or between the client and a representative of the client; or
(5) Among lawyers and their representatives representing the same client.
(c) Who may claim the privilege. The privilege may be claimed by the client, the client's guardian or conservator, the personal representative of a deceased client, or the successor, trustee, or similar representative of a corporation, association, or other organization, whether or not in existence. The person who was the lawyer or the lawyer's representative at the time of the communication is presumed to have authority to claim the privilege but only on behalf of the client.
(d) Exceptions. There is no privilege under this rule:
(1) Furtherance of crime or fraud. If the services of the lawyer were sought or obtained to enable or aid anyone to commit or plan to commit what the client knew or reasonably should have known to be a crime or fraud;
(2) Claimants through same deceased client. As to a communication relevant to an issue between parties who claim through the same deceased client, regardless of whether the claims are by testate or intestate succession or by transaction inter vivos;
(3) Breach of duty by a lawyer or client. As to a communication relevant to an issue of breach of duty by a lawyer to the client or by a client to the lawyer;
(4) Document attested by a lawyer. As to a communication relevant to an issue concerning an attested document to which the lawyer is an attesting witness; and
(5) Joint clients. As to a communication relevant to a matter of common interest between or among two (2) or more clients if the communication was made by any of them to a lawyer retained or consulted in common, when offered in an action between or among any of the clients. (Emphasis added.)

\textsuperscript{37} A model existed for a more limited recognition of the government attorney client privilege in Uniform Rules of Evidence § 502. Leslie, \textit{supra} note 30, at 480.
The availability of the privilege in the federal courts is less clear. While many states, like Kentucky, codified the privilege, Congress rejected proposed Federal Rule of Evidence 503 and left the development of the privilege to case law.\textsuperscript{38} Federal courts, however, came to regard the proposed rule as a restatement of federal common law. Since then, the general assumption among writers\textsuperscript{39} and courts\textsuperscript{40} has been that the attorney-client privilege protects communications between government agencies and legal counsel. The Restatement also adopts this view.

Unless applicable law otherwise provides, the attorney-client privilege extends to a communication of a governmental organization as stated in § 73 and of an individual employee or other agency of a governmental organization as a client with respect to his or her personal interest as stated in §§ 68-72.\textsuperscript{41}

Like many other courts, the Sixth Circuit assumed without deciding that government could assert the attorney-client privilege.\textsuperscript{42} Reed v. Baxter,\textsuperscript{43} for example, involved a claim of attorney-client privilege in a municipal setting. Although the court was willing to assume that the privilege applied, it found that the facts would not support the claim. There, the presence of third parties destroyed the confidence for purposes of the privilege.\textsuperscript{44}

In Ross v. City of Memphis, the Sixth Circuit held squarely “that a government entity can assert attorney-client privilege in the civil context.”\textsuperscript{45} Ross arose out of a suit

\textsuperscript{38} Epstein, supra note 7, at 16.

\textsuperscript{39} See Rice, supra note 34, at 124; LEGAL ETHICS DESKBOOK at 240 (2006). “The general principle is that government lawyers have an attorney-client privilege with their client, but the client is the “government,” and not a particular governmental official. The government attorney may assert the attorney-client privilege to third parties, but he or she may not validly assert it when it is the government itself that is seeking the information. Thus, a government lawyer cannot refuse to divulge information relevant to a criminal investigation on the grounds that another government official confided in her, because the government lawyer represents the government, not any official in his or her personal capacity. In short, a government lawyer may not assert the government attorney-client privilege against the government.” Id. at 241.

\textsuperscript{40} See, e.g., Lexington-Fayette Urban County Government v. Clark, 2005 WL 387434 (Ky. 2005) (implicitly acknowledging existence of government attorney-client privilege). No Kentucky case explicitly holds that the attorney-client privilege extends to a communication of a governmental organization.

\textsuperscript{41} RESTATEMENT (THIRD) OF THE LAW GOVERNING LAWYERS § 74.

\textsuperscript{42} Ross v. City of Memphis, 423 F.3d 596, 600 (6th Cir. 2005) citing Reed v. Baxter, 134 F.3d 351, 356 (6th Cir. 1998) and In re Grand Jury Subpeona (United States v. Doe), 886 F.2d 135, 137-9 (6th Cir. 1983).

\textsuperscript{43} 134 F.3d 351 (6th Cir. 1998).

\textsuperscript{45} Id. at 601.
brought against the city and its former director of police, Walter Crews, who was sued in his individual capacity. Crews raised the advice of counsel as the basis of his qualified immunity defense. The court had to determine whether invocation of the advice of counsel impliedly waived the attorney-client privilege. To answer that question, the court first had to decide if the city could hold the privilege.

In deciding that a city could hold the privilege, the court reviewed the decisions in other circuits and outside authority. The little case law the court found generally assumed the existence of a governmental attorney-client privilege in civil suits between government agencies and private litigants. The court then looked to Proposed Federal Rule of Evidence 503. Like other courts, it accepted the proposed rule as a restatement of federal common law and noted that under the rule a city would have been entitled to the privilege. The court took further note of the fact that the Restatement (Third) of the Law Governing Lawyers §74 recognizes the existence of a governmental attorney-client privilege. The court found these authorities persuasive.

Outside the civil context, however, the court noted that a split recently emerged among the circuits as to the availability of the privilege in grand jury proceedings. In re Grand Jury Investigation held that the Connecticut governor’s office could assert attorney-client privilege in grand jury proceedings. The Second Circuit reasoned that “the traditional rationale for the privilege applies with special force in the government context.” That decision contrasts with In re Witness Before Special Grand Jury 2000-2, In re Grand Jury Subpoena Duces Tecum (the Whitewater Development Corporation case), and In re Lindsey (concerning allegations of sexual harassment in the White House). The Sixth Circuit expressed no opinion on the question dividing the circuits, noting only that “much of the reasoning deployed against recognizing a governmental attorney-client privilege in grand jury proceedings supports its recognition in the civil context.” “The risk of extensive civil liability is particularly acute for municipalities, which do not enjoy sovereign immunity. Thus, in the civil context,

---

46 423 F.3d at 601.
47 Id.
48 399 F.3d 527 (2nd Cir. 2005).
49 Id. at 534.
50 288 F.3d 289 (7th Cir. 2002).
51 112 F.3d 910 (8th Cir. 1997).
52 158 F.3d 1263 (D.C. Cir. 1998).
53 Ross v. City of Memphis, 423 F.3d at 602.
government entities are well-served by the privilege, which allows them to investigate potential wrongdoing more fully and, equally important, pursue remedial options.”

Once one accepts that the privilege exists, the question becomes under what circumstances the privilege might be waived. The privilege, of course, belongs to the client. However, when the client is not a natural person, the problem becomes which individuals ought to be treated as holding the privilege. The difficulty, as was the case with the duty of confidentiality, is in identifying the client. In Ross the district court concluded that Crews himself stood “somewhat in the nature of a client with respect to the advice he received from the City’s attorneys.” Therefore, it held, Crews could disclose that information in his defense. The court of appeals disagreed.

The appellate court saw what the district court did as balancing the importance of the privileged communications to the defense against the city’s interest in maintaining the privilege. “Making the City’s ability to invoke attorney-client privilege contingent on litigation choices made by one of its former employees renders the privilege intolerably uncertain.” The privilege is the city’s to assert. That is not to say that in some instances the individual could not hold the privilege. The court acknowledges that a public officer might claim a personal privilege, but to do so it must be clear that the sought the legal advice in his individual capacity. “Requiring an individual officer to clearly announce a desire for individual advice is critical; it allows the attorney to gauge whether it would be appropriate to advise the individual given the attorney’s obligations concerning representation of the [organization.]”

There are, of course, other matters associated with the privilege not at issue in Ross to which the municipal attorney should be alert. The privilege has eight elements:

1. Where legal advice of any kind is sought
2. from a professional legal adviser in his capacity as such,
3. the communications relating to that purpose
4. made in confidence
5. by the client,
6. are at his instance permanently protected

---

54 Id. at 603.

56 Id. at 603.

58 Id. at 604.

59 Id.
This article has already noted the problematic nature of the first and fifth elements for the municipal attorney. Reed v. Baxter addressed the fourth, and Ross addressed the eighth.

Recently, the Second Circuit had occasion to address the third. In In re County of Erie, the issue concerned policy advice rendered by a government lawyer. The case involved a suit over the practice of strip searching detainees entering the county jail without regard to individualized suspicion or the offense alleged. In the course of discovery the county withheld various documents as privileged attorney-client communications. They reviewed the law concerning strip searches of detainees, assessed the county’s current search policy, recommended alternative policies, and monitored the implementation of those policy changes. After in camera review, the trial judge ordered the documents disclosed. The county appealed.

Citing the Sixth Circuit’s decision in Ross, the Second Circuit said:

In civil suits between private litigants and government agencies, the attorney-client privilege protects most confidential communications between government counsel and their clients that are made for the purpose of obtaining or providing legal assistance.... At least in civil litigation between a government agency and private litigants, the government’s claim to the protections of the attorney-client privilege is on par with the claim of an individual or a corporate entity.

The issue here was whether the communications were made for the purpose of obtaining or providing legal advice, as opposed to advice on policy.

The court noted that a parallel issue arises in the context of communications to and from in-house lawyers who also serve as business executives. The question is whether the communication was generated for the purpose of obtaining and providing legal advice as opposed to business advice. The usual statement of the rule is that to qualify as privileged, the communication must be only for the purpose of obtaining or providing legal assistance. The trail judge reasoned that the communications went beyond legal analysis and ventured into policymaking, thus losing the claimed 61 473 F.3d 413 (2d. Cir. 2007).

---

62 Id. at 418.

63 Id. at 419.
privilege. The Second Circuit decided that the appropriate standard was whether the predominant purpose was to render or solicit legal advice.

The complete lawyer may well promote and reinforce the legal advice given, weigh it, and lay out its ramifications by explaining: how the advice is feasible and can be implemented; the legal downsides, risks and costs of taking the advice or doing otherwise; what alternatives exist to present measures or the measures advised; what other persons are doing or thinking about the matter; or the collateral benefits, risks or costs in terms of expense, politics, insurance, commerce, morals, and appearances. So long as the predominant purpose of the communication is legal advice, these considerations and caveats are not other than legal advice or severable from it. The predominant purpose of a communication cannot be ascertained by quantification or classification of one passage or another; it should be assessed dynamically and in light of the advice being sought or rendered, as well as the relationship between advice that can be rendered only by consulting the legal authorities and advice that can be given by a non-lawyer. The more careful the lawyer, the more likely it is that the legal advice will entail follow-through by facilitation, encouragement and monitoring.

Even after County of Erie, it remains important to separate legal advice from policy and political advice. The court reiterated that “general policy or political advice” remains unprotected. The lesson of the case is that, in the context of government, the notion of what constitutes legal advice is broad and not bounded by a bright line. “[A] lawyer's recommendation of a policy that complies with [a] legal obligation – or that advocates and promotes compliance, or oversees implementation of compliance measures – is legal advice.”

In closing, I leave with this caveat. As mentioned in the discussion above, the application of the attorney-client privilege in the government context tends to parallel the applications of the corporate attorney-client privilege, but the government attorney must be vigilant against taking the parallels too far. For example, in Upjohn Co. v. United States the Supreme Court rejected the use of the “control group” test with respect to the 64 Id. at 422.

65 Id. at 420.
66 Id. at 420-21.
67 Id. at 422.
corporate privilege. However, in Reed v. Baxter⁶⁹ the Sixth Circuit did not follow Upjohn. Further, given the nature of government work, both the recipient of the advice and the lawyer must guard against inadvertent disclosure to others within the organization.